

1 min to read

World Health Organization (WHO) estimates that 12 million people are infected with hepatitis B virus (HBV) worldwide.

HBV is a common cause of liver disease and is transmitted through blood and body fluids. It is a leading cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

Approximately 6 million people are infected with hepatitis C virus (HCV) worldwide.

HBV is a common cause of liver disease and is transmitted through blood and body fluids. It is a leading cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

HBV is a common cause of liver disease and is transmitted through blood and body fluids. It is a leading cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

Approximately 12 million people are infected with hepatitis B virus (HBV) worldwide.

HBV D

HBV D is a common cause of liver disease and is transmitted through blood and body fluids. It is a leading cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

HBV D is a common cause of liver disease and is transmitted through blood and body fluids. It is a leading cause of liver cancer and cirrhosis.

Approximately 50 million people are infected with hepatitis D virus (HDV) worldwide.

